

A scatter plot showing two classes of data points: cyan circles and magenta circles. A green line represents the linear decision boundary between the two classes. The cyan points are primarily located in the upper-left region, while the magenta points are primarily in the lower-right region. The green line has a positive slope and separates the two clusters. There are some overlapping points between the two classes near the decision boundary.

